Q: What is the difference between Openstax and opensource? I've heard both terms used in support for OpenStax: OpenStax is produced by the University of Southern California, and it is an open access courseware. OpenStax is a free, open-source courseware that's produced by the OpenStax Project. What is the difference between OpenStax and opensource? A: OpenStax is a free, open-source courseware. It's being used by university to distribute content. opensource is open-source software. Software that meets these requirements is subject to a specific license agreement. Sometimes these terms are used interchangeably, but they're technically not. We've seen several prototype cases before where we can imagine how far the functionality of a phone could be improved through the use of a ceramic outer. This time, Finnish design studio, Needle, has taken a slightly more conventional approach when it comes to their latest design. What is it, you may ask? The Zeuton, of course. Zeuton is an image stabilisation system that 'disassembles' the phone into two, using a flex-shaft design to keep the camera lens – or any other gadget – steady. The position of the lens may be moved inside the body of the phone, ensuring that it can be well-protected, while the camera will stay at a constant distance from the user's face in any situation. The Zeuton design appears to be similar to the existing ShutterCam system found on the HTC Hero, so there's a chance that other manufacturers have thought about the concept before now. Most of the ShutterCam is in the phone's battery, meaning that it can more easily be mounted in a different way so that only the front of the phone is moving. Take a look at our video for a bit more info on how the Zeuton system works, and images from the firm's gallery below the fold. Via Cool Smartphone.Q: How to install ruby-qt4 and kde4 on lubuntu?
