capabilities. Effects of static magnetic field on intestinal permeability in rats. The effects of magnetic field on the intestine in terms of intestinal permeability were studied using the isolated intestine technique with a semi-permeable membrane. The rats were exposed to a static magnetic field with Gauss of 0.2-6.0 (1 Gauss = 10^{-4} G). The total pressure of paracellular leakage was increased by magnetic field exposure in a dose-dependent manner. This increase was not inhibited by indomethacin. After exposure to the magnetic field, paracellular leakage was measured. The permeability of the intestinal barrier by exposure to a static magnetic field (0.6 Gauss) was enhanced. In an isolated ileum, the magnetic field was applied in the mucosal surface. The peak of the release of each compound varied with concentration. These results suggest that magnetic field exposure induced the increase of the barrier function of the intestinal barrier, and that the response was not mediated by prostaglandin.

A phase II trial of neoadjuvant chemotherapy of patients with unresectable hepatocellular carcinoma. To evaluate efficacy of neoadjuvant chemotherapy in patients with unresectable hepatocellular carcinoma (HCC). Forty-four patients with unresectable HCC were randomly assigned to one of two groups: 8 courses of intra-arterial hepatic chemotherapy (IAC) plus intravenous systemic chemotherapy (IVS) given every 4 weeks (IAC + IVS group, n = 22), and 10 courses of IVS alone every 4 weeks (IVS group, n = 22). Hematological toxicity of neoadjuvant chemotherapy was acceptable in both groups. Stable disease or partial response was seen in 17 (77%) of 22 patients in the IAC + IVS group and in 9 (41%) of 22 patients in the IVS group.

Peer-to-peer or mesh networks are a form of network communication which allows devices to communicate with each other through multiple hops without the use of a server. The main advantage of a peer-to-peer network is scalability, since it uses very little of the network resources. A peer-to-peer network consists of a set of nodes that each exchange data with each other, and thus all the nodes in the network are fully connected. It is also possible to have a number of peers-only networks, such as a mobile network, which consists of mobile devices directly connected to each other through one or more fixed access points. The mobile network is connected to a public network which provides traditional communication services
