outfile or one that incorporates data from only one variable: awk '$1 ~ /^(.*)$/' file > outfile A: You can do this with cut: $ cut -f 1 -d" file.csv > newfile.csv cut splits the file into parts based on which column you specify and saves the column in newfile.csv. The first number is the file number, so we can name the new file after this number, which makes the file names in the new files the same as the files from which they are created. The columns are separated by blank spaces by default, so we choose this as our delimiter. If you choose something different you need to tell how to separate the two columns, and how to deal with the space that might be a part of them. This could be done with a regexp. A: You can also use join -a 1 -a 2 -o 2.2
