To assess the validity of a novel preoperative questionnaire to predict complications after anterior lumbar surgery. Retrospective cohort study. Academic spine surgery practice. Patients undergoing anterior lumbar surgery between 2010 and 2013 were identified from a prospective neurosurgical registry. The Corona Morbidity Outcome Questionnaire (CMQ) with modifications to include specific questions regarding general health and fitness before surgery and is referred to as the Healthbar-CMQ. The objectives of this study were to determine the performance of the Healthbar-CMQ for predicting postoperative complications and to determine the ability of a preoperative questionnaire to predict nonoperative adverse events. Seventy-two patients answered the Healthbar-CMQ for predicting nonoperative adverse events and a standard risk assessment tool, the Kansas Pain Adverse Events Risk Scale, 2 years after surgery. The Healthbar-CMQ was also completed before surgery to help predict postoperative complications. The primary outcome of this study was postoperative complications. Secondarily, we examined the ability of the Healthbar-CMQ to predict nonoperative adverse events, specifically persistent pain and the need for a physical therapy visit within 6 months of surgery. Fifty-one (71%) patients experienced 1 or more postoperative complications, 34 (48%) had persistent pain, and 25 (35%) were referred to physical therapy. The Healthbar-CMQ had moderate predictive ability for predicting persistent pain (area under the curve 0.79) and for predicting nonoperative adverse events (area under the curve 0.724). The Healthbar-CMQ had fair predictive accuracy for predicting postoperative complications.Q: How to pass an object to an Android activity?
