The technology is “the deepest, most realistic gameplay of any sports game” and uses motion capture data to power an “enhanced” player model that now “looks and feels more like real players,” according to EA Sports. FIFA 21 featured FIFA Trax, a new motion capture system that allowed players to emulate their real-life moves and accelerations with ease. FIFA 22 takes that system one step further by having a more robust and accurate motion capture system. Motion capture data for the new game, collected by the Real Player Motion Vital Team, is given to the FIFA 22 development team, which in turn develops a series of gameplay enhancements based on the data. Let's take a closer look at the newest additions to the popular football sim. Four New Feature Stages The next-generation FIFA video game delivers a complete overhaul of the game's feature-set. In addition to keeping all of the game's original mechanics intact, FIFA 22 introduces several new game-modes, such as the new feature-stage mode, tournament mode, online, and more. Feature-stage mode allows players to take the role of a real-world football club in a set of tournaments where they try to build and manage their club for the long-term. Tournament mode is a new standalone experience that allows players to compete in a series of pre-selected, highly-competitive tournaments. Online mode offers online multiplayer, with up to 16 players per match, including friendlies. Players can now also create online groups to invite friends to play together. The developers also showed a new microtransaction-based economy. New collectibles include badges, kits and official merchandise, which can be traded for in-game currency or purchased in the in-game store. HyperMotion Technology New next-generation physics technology is the key to the gameplay breakthrough with FIFA 22. HyperMotion Technology is a brand new system that is 50 times more accurate than previous versions of the game. At its core is a new version of the Frostbite engine, now in Unity 5. EA's three-year partnership with OptiTrack is bringing this powerful technology to a new generation of motion capture technology. Players with a tracking system can now take their gameplay skills to the next level. Players can log training sessions in the FIFA Ultimate Team mode, record their trainings and use them to improve

Professional Player Contract The only way to create the ultimate player is by authenticating and naming a player before they are on the official transfer list. To create a player contract you need to name the player, choose a custom name, and describe why they are going to be a great addition to your squad. But if you choose not to name the player before they make the transfer, they will be on the transfer list until the deal is made, making them unavailable to play in your tournament. If you choose to name the player in your tournament you will receive a notification upon successful transfer. You can then re-name the player with the player's custom name they have chosen.

Features Achilles Heel Having a player on the transfer list could be costly if they are sold, or if you don't complete a transfer before the transfer deadline. Highlighted here in green are players that are on the transfer list, but not selected by you in this tournament. Any players that are not named for any reason will automatically be added to the transfer list. You will receive a notification if the player's name is being added or removed. You will receive a notification when a player you name is selected for a tournament. A contract will be automatically activated if the player you have chosen makes a transfer or is released. You will then be able to re-name the player with their custom name.

GAME PREMIUM Get a premium FIFA experience that allows you to play with more control and prepare yourself for the real challenge.
