This approach does not require the use of traditional resonance analysis, which has been difficult to implement due to the inhomogeneous nature of the distributed 3D vibration modes. Furthermore, the proposed method allows one to study interaction between the vibrating parts (e.g., panels). The effectiveness of the proposed method is demonstrated using the example of an inclined panel, which is supported by a uniform rod. Numerical results obtained by using the proposed approach were compared with the results obtained by using the traditional eigenvalue analysis method. The effectiveness of the proposed approach was compared with the traditional eigenvalue analysis method. The application of photogrammetric techniques to the inspection of FOD damage is normally either from survey only, or from a single image available in a volumetric data set from a 3D scanner. Such techniques are well suited to locating large-scale FOD damage, but they are not able to capture the details of damage which may be occurring at the millimetre scale, or to predict their future behaviour. A method of avoiding the formation of craters during the propagation of a converging jet of water is described. The method involves the utilization of water flow curtains and interceptors to prevent the formation of craters. An apparatus for carrying out the method is also described. The method may be utilized to prevent the formation of craters in firefighting and other related activities. A method of avoiding the formation of craters

Wednesday, March 30, 2016 Investment Supervision: The Most Powerful Forms of Regulation
By Nathan Kelly A friend and colleague recently shared a great quote on supervision with me:
"Auditors can only have so much impact on a firm's performance without changing the firm's culture." Another friend who is a senior auditor and was my supervisor at PricewaterhouseCoopers shared another observation with me: "Auditors can only have so much impact on a firm's performance without changing the firm's culture." I use this thought process often. In many ways, the culture of a firm is the lifeblood of the firm. Let's be clear: culture has a somewhat nebulous meaning. While the structure of a firm's culture is important, it is also the flow of that culture which drives the success of the firm. So, it is important to realize that culture in the firm can be an active force in the firm or in some firms it can be quite reactive. But, I have found that the dynamics of a firm's culture can be changed by a firm's leadership.
