

In FIFA 21, the ball feels heavier and the pitch has more physical properties, the first time that the developers have focused the physics engine on making the ball feel more solid on impact. The weight is increased due to the introduction of an additional compression material to the ball which creates more grip and improves the overall feel when the ball is being hit. The density of the ball has been adjusted to create a more accurate, responsive ball, and the pitch has been made more responsive by introducing smaller dents in the surface. All changes have been made to ensure that the ball will feel better and for players to be more accurate with their shooting. "FIFA 22 is the most technologically advanced FIFA title to date, leveraging our unique combination of the incredible technology used in real-world football and our technology," said David Rutter, FIFA Lead Gameplay Designer. "There is a lot of work required to develop the perfect ball, and we've put our heads together to make sure that we have the best-in-class ball physics, responsive player models, and a pitch that is faithful to the way real football is played." FIFA 22 will launch with over 1,400 in-game customizations including more than 450 new kits and 80 new player attributes, including the new crossbar visualization. The pitch will also have an increase in markings, rotations and pocket sizes. Additionally, there will be new broadcast effects to have the match broadcast in the best of digital and cinematic quality. The Ultimate Team card game modes have been completely reworked with the introduction of two new gameplay modes in two new aspects of Ultimate Team: a unique "cup" mode that features a single-elimination knockout tournament for clubs and a new "league" mode that splits the months of the year into half-seasons and then into a single-elimination knockout tournament. In addition to cup and league mode, FIFA 22 also brings back the popular matchmaking mode and introduces an entirely new Career Mode for players to try to continue growing their career and become more competitive with other clubs. "With the introduction of more goalkeepers, we've set out to make this a more challenging year in Ultimate Team," said Aaron Davidson, creative director at EA SPORTS. "Ultimate Team returns with a refreshed gameplay experience - both on and off the pitch - to give the millions of players around the world a deeper connection to the game
