To describe the anatomic and etiopathological characteristics of the anterior tibial nerve and related anatomic structures. This study was conducted in two parts. In the first part, we analyzed the anatomic and histopathological characteristics of the non-uncicatrized and uncicatrized anterior tibial nerve. In the second part, we describe the nerve trunk of the anterior tibial nerve (ATN) up to the knee level. Anatomic analysis revealed that the ATN does not present any particular anatomical deviation up to the knee. Histopathological analysis, which was performed using immunohistochemistry, in part one of the study, showed that the two segments of the ATN were composed of myelinated nerve fibers as well as thick- and thin-caliber nerve fibers. At the region of the knee joint, where these fibers are more numerous, numerous fat cells were observed, which were specifically localized in the deep part of the gastrocnemius muscle and around the fascia of the pes anserinus. In the second part of the study, we observed three segments of the ATN: at the region of the knee, the central trunk of the ATN, and the anastomotic segment between the central trunk and the lateral cutaneous nerve of the foot. The segment corresponding to the central trunk of the ATN is well-developed, whereas the anastomotic segment is poorly developed. Anatomic and histopathological study of the ATN and the related anatomic structures
