Shaun Chowne Shaun Chowne (born 11 April 1985) is an English professional rugby league footballer who has played in the 2000s and 2010s. He has played at representative level for England, and at club level for West London Sharks and the London Skolars, as a or, and has coached at club level for St Helens Thirds. Chowne grew up in the Ealing area and joined the Hanger Hill Academy and club of choice West London Sharks, where he remains a season ticket holder even into his early thirties. He continued his development at St Joseph's College, Old Oak, where he won the Arthur Albert memorial cup for outstanding sportsman of the school. Chowne was then offered a trial with the Warrington Wolves. He impressed so much that they decided he would make his debut on the reserve-team for their 2005 match against St Helens. After four successful seasons on the reserve-team Chowne was called up to the first-team squad after Leon Pryce suffered an injury. He immediately made an impact scoring five tries in six games for the Wolves. This included a 'holy grail' 74-yard punt return for a try against Castleford Tigers in a 2006 Challenge Cup semi final. He proved himself as a reliable winger, as well as scoring four tries. Chowne signed a new contract with the Warrington Wolves to 2007. After a successful season in which he scored a try in all five of Warrington's Challenge Cup games, Chowne was once again offered a professional contract. He signed a two-year deal for this season. However, his club career suffered a setback and he ended up on loan to London Skolars in 2008. Chown

Rolls-Royce S-Class (1930) The S-Class was a streamlined two-seat version of the S4 and S5. The S-Class was one of the company's last airliners. Only one was built and it was used as a passenger transport, transporting Maharajah of Kochi and his entourage from London to Cherrapunji. The S-Class first flew in 1929 and was followed by the S2-Class, S3-Class and S5-Class in 1930. The last S-Class, S-112, first flew in 1932. Design and development The S4 and S5 were developed with streamlined bodywork and were effectively supercharged variants of the S3. The S-class had a better fuel efficiency than the S3-class and was considered a departure from the all-metal, fin-based airliners of the 1920s to a new design philosophy that emphasised low drag form. The S-class had a weight reduction of over over the S3, achieved by using a honeycomb-shaped steel skin that occupied over half the aircraft's area, a single moving tail-skid to aid stability on landing, and a belly fairing on the fin. The S-class was similar in layout to the S3, but with a more streamline-shaped nose. The S3 was an all-metal aircraft with more cantilever wings, while the S-class had a steel outer skin with a wood-skinned centre section. A number of different engines were tested on the S-class and S3-class, including the Wright J-5, Nieuport 7N and several versions of the Wright Whirlwind. A variant with four-bladed propellers was also tested, but the old four-bladed props caused aerodynamic problems. Operational history Maharajah of Kochi and his entourage flew in the S-class to Cherrapunji to collect him from the airport at Cherrapunji. S-112 was used by Lufthansa as a ferry after the outbreak of

World War II and to fly between Munich and Berlin. Maharajah of Kochi owned a single S-class, which he flew on a number of occasions. Of the S-class and S3-class, three S-class were still in service in 1934 and two of the S-class remained in
