To describe a series of nevi that developed after intraocular injection of paclitaxel in the treated eye of a patient with nonmetastatic breast cancer. Retrospective case report. A 70-year-old white woman with primary breast cancer developed a nonpigmented melanotic-like lesion in the left eye after receiving local intravitreal injection of paclitaxel during the course of breast cancer treatment. The lesion was painless, except for mild discomfort after the initial intravitreal injection, with no other new or exacerbating visual symptoms or signs. A lesion with the appearance of a localized melanotic-like nevus was identified by the ophthalmologist, and was surgically excised at a local hospital. The diagnosis of a localized melanotic-like nevus was confirmed by histopathologic examination. Intravitreal injection of paclitaxel is associated with the rare development of a melanotic-like nevus at the injection site. It is not clear whether this is a medication-related complication or a chance association. Patients who receive intravitreal injections of paclitaxel for treatment of nonmetastatic breast cancer should be monitored closely for new, asymptomatic lesions at the injection sites.A non-invasive method to assess the haematopoietic potential of human bone marrow cells expanded in culture. The expansion of haematopoietic precursor cells can be achieved in vitro, but the functional quality and therapeutic relevance of such cultures is still questionable. In this study, we have used a non-invasive method to investigate the haematopoietic potential of expanded murine and human bone marrow (BM) cells. This is based on the capacity of these cells to differentiate in vivo into mature blood cells. Expanded murine and human CD34+ BM cells were transplanted into lethally irradiated syngeneic recipients

Since the release of the forthcoming game, More Than Meets The Eye, we've received many opinions and suggestions by the users of PlayStation®Portable. "Your feedback is very important to us. It is greatly appreciated!"

We would like to address the users' comments and thoughts here.

1. In "Optimization", the title of "SETUP" instruction has been changed to "Install". By double-clicking the icon and selecting "Install", the system will install the application on the memory stick.

2. To match the palette of the PlayStation®Portable, the design of icons and background images has been optimized. For more details, please refer to the following webpage. (Links to the original icon and background image are included in this document.)

It seems that many users have missed it in "SETUP" during the installation process. The installation instructions in this document have been provided to ensure user's understanding. We apologize for any inconvenience.

3. Thanks for your suggestions regarding the execution speed of the application. When the user is playing, the game runs in default mode. Therefore, enabling the services to run smoothly while listening to music and watching movies is required, but the game itself needs memory. On the condition that the user is able to install more than 100MB of memory stick memory, the game can speed up automatically.

Thank you for your suggestions. We appreciate your enthusiasm toward the PlayStation®Portable. We will continue to develop the software.
