How does the disease that causes Rocky Mountain spotted fever kill rats and mice? Everyone wants to know what happens when Rickettsial bacteria invade the bloodstream and settle in the liver. The authors dissect a mouse infected with R. rickettsii and see how the rickettsia represses host cell functions. (Hotchkiss et al., J. Exp. Med. 177, 1993.) R. rickettsii is a serious human bacterial infection, caused by the bacterium Rickettsia rickettsii, and is characterized by fever and rash. While the pathogenesis of Rickettsia rickettsii is characterized by the pathogen spread throughout endothelial cells of small blood vessels of the liver, spleen, lymph nodes, kidneys, and lungs, the molecular mechanisms in which the bacteria cause pathogenesis remain poorly understood. In this study, we investigated host molecular responses to this pathogen at the cellular level. The results showed that R. rickettsii induced the suppression of host genes and the shut down of host cellular functions in infected cells. The data indicated that the repression of host gene expression is due to alterations in host cell protein synthesis induced by the presence of the Rickettsia bacteria. We observed that R. rickettsii repressed host gene expression by suppressing the initiation phase of host gene transcription via inhibition of transcription factor nuclear translocation. Our study showed that R. rickettsii could inhibit host gene expression by repressing host transcription factor nuclear translocation. These data increase our understanding of the basic pathogenesis mechanisms of R. rickettsii infection. Tin acts as a potent radioprotective agent against radiation-induced structural chromosomal aberrations in cultured human peripheral lymphocytes. The radioprotective efficacy of tin was evaluated in vitro with cultured human peripheral lymphocytes. Four different concentrations of tin (0.1, 1, 5 and 10 mg/ml) were incubated with human lymphocytes up to 24 h prior to the irradiation. Results demonstrated that the protective effects were manifested throughout the cell cycle. However, the best radiation protection was obtained with the lowest concentration (0.1 mg/ml) of tin. Treatment with 0.1 mg/ml tin (irradiated or not irradiated) did not result in any significant increase of chromosomal aberrations, though there was a slight decrease in the number of metaphase cells. The number of aberrant cells was decreased at all post-irradiation times when the

Artificial intelligence (AI) is changing the way we work, learn, and live. And for the most part, the process is invisible. We simply use it day to day and remain largely unaware of its omnipresence. In this year's edition of the business travel awards, a panel of judges ranked ticketing giant Amadeus the European Travel Agent of the Year. Amadeus saw more than 500 European business trips booked in 2016 and grew more than five percent. Tech companies are hiring a lot of college grads this year. And that's a good thing, because many millennials have had to eat up a lot of debt to get there. The Global Placement Index (GPI) is a new measure of job prospects for young graduates. It aims to address the fact that some millennials have had a rough ride in the job market. Digital technology is affecting every aspect of our lives, from the way we shop and enjoy work to the way we interact with each other and our surroundings. Its effects are most pervasive on the world of business travel. Here are five ways technology is changing the way we fly and work. You read that correctly. About half of all companies regularly monitor employees in the workplace. Now, with the popularity of push notification apps and wireless Internet, you can log off on your device with a single touch. While travel and business has always had a strong relationship, today the two disciplines are more closely intertwined than ever. The hospitality industry is seeing a spike in demand for hostesses, bartenders, and bellhops. So if you're interested in the field, here's a quick guide to getting a job in the industry. Interest rates are slowly beginning to rise across the board. But they're unlikely to push bond yields to unprecedented levels, as some investors had feared. So what will markets do in response? More than a year ago, JetBlue CEO Dave Barger went on a Wall Street earnings conference call that he referred to as "the public execution of a bunch of airline industry executives." He was referring to the fact that all the airline executives were forced to answer to their shareholders for the performance of their companies. We've all been there: Traveling from one site to another on a business trip with a clunky data plan. That could mean a lot of missed calls or texts from coworkers back home. The European Commission's antitrust
