A: I have tried windows command line and it works and the image gets downloaded. It looks like there is a problem with ubuntu. Q: Key Map and Delays Working on an audio project in which I've come across a design issue regarding how to incorporate key mapping when multiple tracks are mixed down and a multiple-delay is applied. I have a sound wave generated by the input nodes. The output nodes take their values from a master track, and each output node corresponds to a particular master track. Effectively, the user is performing a key map on the master track. If I apply a delay to any of the tracks, what happens to the key mapping? Does the delay just "break" that key mapping? I am really stuck on this one. In my mind, the sound is played back in reverse and key mapping is applied to the master track when the sound is played back in reverse. When I try playing that track back at the standard speed, it seems like the sound is only playing the originally played audio before it is delayed, not the key mapped audio. A: If the key mapping is done in software (ie. it's not 6d1f23a050
