asynchronously, with a variable amount of times, given an input, however I can't figure out how to do this. I'd like it to be flexible because if there is some external change I don't want it to effect on the scheduled time, for example I'd like it to run and go at 12:00 PST, then if at 14:00 PST there is a external change to my input, or whatever the logic will be, but it will not run at 14:00 PST and it will not run again until at least at 12:00 PST, as this is the time that it was configured to run. I have all the other constraints set up correctly, it's just this middle logic I'm unsure on. A: Lambda will run synchronously every time. There is no way to configure it to run asynchronous, because you aren't able to write a body of code that changes how it behaves. There are a few ways you can achieve what you want though. You could write a script to call lambda in intervals using 6d1f23a050
