The Pancharatna Kritis are usually written to praise Rama; either he is being shown his greatness, or Shiva is shown to be the one who has gained supremacy. The Kritis are usually associated with the raga Adi Muthaai. The Kritis are also called Todi poems or songs and are usually written in the Todilagana script. The concept of the Kritis is that when Shiva snatched off the chariot-wheel of the demon-king Ravana, who threatened to cause havoc in the world, the chariot was thrown into the sea. Sita rescued it, and was presented to her husband Rama. This event was recorded in the Ayodhya Kanda of the Ramayana. The Pancharatna Kritis are about the greatness of Rama and Sita; Sita's worth, wisdom, beauty, valour, her good nature, devoted love to Rama, beauty of her arms, her kindness to her mother, her mental and physical strength, her devotion to Rama. In the Pancharatna Kritis, Rama is held in high esteem. Here he is said to have the chariot of the Sun outshining the Moon. The beautiful Sita with her divine arms is discussed in the Todi Kritis. Sankara considered the Pancharatna Kritis his most important works. His commentaries on these works are also called Sankaras. The Gita Govinda is a verse from the Sankara commentaries on the Pancharatna Kritis. The Gita Govinda is a verse from the Sankara commentaries on the Pancharatna Kritis. The Pancharatna Kritis are almost the same in all the dialects, but some of the raga names are different. It is this variation in the raga names that leads me to believe that there were many composers of these Kritis. Not being from southern India, I cannot comment on the northern Indian dialects. The Pancharatna Kritis are not divided into Natakam and Triputi sections as in the older Natakam Kritis. The kriti stanzas are not divided into separate parts and are divided into various subdivisions in the original Sanskrit. In the Telugu Kritis these divisions are called Mangalagiri and Vasistha.
