I am trying to write a script that checks if a command is in the PATH. I am aware of the getenv command but I am looking for something slightly different. Something like (pseudo-code): if /usr/bin/date then echo 'Success' else echo 'Failure' fi Basically, what I'm looking for is a command that I can run in a script that will tell me if the command is in the PATH or not. Edit Also, I am assuming that I need to somehow prepend PATH with /usr/bin to get this to work. A: You can use the utility test(1) to test if the command is available in the path. A: You can also try the command type -p $(which wc) if you see the output like /bin/wc then its in the path otherwise, it is not in the path A: If you need to do this in a script, you can use the following : if ["$(command -v $1)"]; then echo "$1 is found in PATH" else echo "$1 is NOT found in PATH" fi You may want to redirect the error stream as well.
