Since this is my first review I thought I would copy and paste the review rather than write it all again. Feel free to follow us on Instagram and subscribe to our channel on YouTube, we are always eager to find out your thoughts. However, I begin these reviews by starting with a product that all professional photographers should look at closer. For me it would be Adobe Photoshop. In this post I will go over the basics and how to get the most out of it and then move onto the review of Adobe Lightroom. I want to emphasize that these apps are vastly different and if you are looking to edit your images on the go then Lightroom is the way to go. This post is just my review of the software and my take on how to use it (and I do have some knowledge on it). Photoshop is free and Lightroom is paid. Photoshop is a photo editing app and Lightroom is a photo cataloging and managing app. Both do a lot more, so you really have to compare them on their benefits and how they perform when it comes to editing. I still remember the very first time when I was playing around with Photoshop. It astounded me that such a huge software application could be so small and user-friendly. You shouldn't have to go to the help files to perform most actions. It's just one click away. I had some really fun times with this program. I had forgotten about it for years. Then we were faced with an urgent Photoshop review situation. The problem was that Photoshop was not saving properly and we were getting an error message that "Photoshop couldn't save either selected file or the automatic backup file...". That's when my second serious love affair with this program started.

Unlike Photoshop, GIMP is also available as part of a Virtual Machine called There is no doubt that systems integration, image management, and digital asset management are expenses that every business should consider, but we'd argue that the cost benefits of remaining cloud-based will be far greater than one could expect to recover by purchasing software solutions without the services of a cloud provider. Photoshop Creative Cloud has been a major success. Adobe's accounts show the vast number of people who are now using Photoshop for photo retouching and graphic design on a daily basis. Mic, the company's data analyst, states that more than 50 million people use the company's cloud products every month, and gives the number of users for each cloud product.
