When you run an enterprise-level network, you need to be very careful when adding servers or applications to it. After running its software for years, you will eventually add a new product to your network, and you wouldn't know about it until you actually experience problems with the newly added software. This can lead to a lot of wasted time and money. A powerful tool like the Windows Defrag utility must be used to minimize Windows' tendency to fragment hard disk space. The usual approach of creating subfolders on a hard disk makes it easier to find files. However, data storage can fragment over time if it is not thoroughly cleared away. Once the hard disk is fragmented, it is more difficult to find specific data which is useful to you. The solution is to operate Disk Defrag. It works by putting data back on the same area of the hard disk where most of the action takes place. This makes it easier to find data on the hard disk. The Disk Management application has its own utility which allows you to perform a similar function. It is much quicker than the Disk Defrag utility. However, it is not as powerful.
