By Anthony Salvanto, Heather Long and Shariff Hamza The major parties are now competing with each other for their supporters' votes. But they're not worried about the kind of vote they're going to get from their current voters. They're more worried about the kind of votes they can persuade people to vote for them. That's according to our national tracking poll. We did the survey from January 19-21, and it is based on 1,186 registered voters. The Democrats: Not worried about good voters, but about persuadable voters California Democrat Jim Costa is the only Democrat in the House district where he lives, but he is a centrist Democrat - a member of the moderate Blue Dog Caucus. And he is worried about losing his district next week, to another Democrat - one of his main challengers, Congressman Mike Thompson.
